This summer, Grinnell College will be hosting a summer coding day camp for students who will be starting fourth grade or fifth grade, no previous computing experience is necessary.

Students will learn about computer technology and computer programming. Along the way, they will develop basic programs to make interesting digital artifacts (artworks) that they can share with others. Students will also develop skills in problem solving, in computational thinking, and more. The curriculum will be developed and taught by Grinnell College faculty, staff, and students. Days will be filled with activities designed to be playful and fun – it's camp!

The cost is $25 which will include lunch and snacks each day. Register online at:
